

“Let Your Action Speak | Be Quiet and Get Success | An Eye Opening Motivational Story | Wordy Tales

(aka Be silent and get everything):

Summary

- The story centers on a boy named Rohan who dreams big. He is intelligent and ambitious, but he has a habit: he talks a lot—about his plans, ideas, and goals—to everyone.
- Despite all the talking, Rohan struggles to achieve real success. His dreams remain unfulfilled, and his efforts yield little progress.
- One day, he meets a wise man (Guruji). Observing Rohan’s behavior, Guruji questions why he always speaks about his dreams but never achieves them.
- Guruji tells Rohan a story of a farmer named Dev who, despite being poor, quietly worked without boasting. Over time, Dev acquired land, planted crops, expanded, and succeeded—without drawing much attention to himself.
- The wisdom from the story:
 1. Talking too much causes loss of energy and focus.
 2. When you speak of your goals frequently, your mind feels as though you've already achieved them, and that saps your drive.
 3. Others may react negatively—discourage you, doubt you, or steal your ideas—if you broadcast your ambitions too much.
- Guruji advises Rohan: speak less, act more. Let your results (your success) make the noise, not your words.
- Rohan takes this to heart. He stops announcing his plans, focuses on his efforts quietly, and gradually finds that his success grows. In school, he performs exceedingly well, surprising friends and others with what he’s achieved.
- The moral: Silence + action = true power. One’s work and results speak louder than empty promises or frequent declarations.

🌱 Let Your Action Speak – A Motivational Story

In a small town lived a boy named Rohan.

Rohan was clever, full of dreams, and always bursting with ideas. He often told everyone around him what he would achieve one day.

"I will become the best in my class."

"I will do something so big the world will know my name."

His friends would listen, nod, and sometimes laugh. Days turned into months, yet Rohan's achievements remained ordinary. The more he spoke, the less he seemed to do.

🌟 The Meeting with Guruji

One afternoon, feeling restless, Rohan went to visit Guruji, a wise old man respected in the town.

"Guruji," he sighed, "I have so many dreams, but no matter what I do, success slips away from me. Why is this happening?"

Guruji looked into his eager eyes and smiled gently.

"My child," he said, "your problem lies not in your dreams but in your tongue. Let me tell you a story."

🌾 The Farmer Dev

Long ago, in a nearby village, lived a poor farmer named Dev. He had almost nothing—just a small patch of land and a broken hut.

While others spoke endlessly about how hard life was, Dev remained silent. He worked on his land from sunrise to sunset. With his savings, he slowly bought another small piece of land. The next year, he sowed more crops. Year after year, he grew stronger, richer, and respected.

The villagers were astonished. "When did this man become so successful? We never heard him brag!"

Dev never answered. He just smiled, for his fields full of golden crops spoke louder than words ever could.

🔑 The Lesson

Guruji turned to Rohan.

"Do you see, child? When you talk too much about your dreams, three things happen:

1. You waste your energy in words.
2. Your mind feels as though the dream is already achieved, so you lose the hunger to fight for it.
3. And worst of all, people may mock you, discourage you, or even steal your ideas."

Rohan lowered his head. He understood.

A New Beginning

From that day, Rohan changed.

He stopped announcing his plans. Instead, he poured his energy into action—studying late into the night, practicing with discipline, quietly sharpening his skills.

Weeks passed. Then months.

When exam results were announced, Rohan stood at the very top. His friends were shocked. Teachers were proud. And even those who once doubted him whispered, “How did he do it?”

Rohan only smiled. For now, his success itself had become his voice.

Moral of the Story

Silence holds power. Let your work speak for you.

Words may sound sweet, but it is your actions that echo loudest in the world.
